

Michelle K. Williams

Michelle K. Williams, M.S. is a 4th year doctoral candidate in the Clinical Psychology PhD program at Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis (IUPUI), specializing in Health Psychology. Her research delves into the relationship between mental health conditions and cardiometabolic disease risk and explores the potential of novel interventions (e.g., internet cognitive-behavioral therapy) to address health disparities. Prior to graduate school, she received her B.S. in Psychology with a minor in Educational Studies from the University of Florida. Michelle will continue her clinical training as a psychology intern at the University of Chicago Medicine in July 2024.
